

COMPANY EVENTS

Intrinergy Hosts Former Governor and U.S. Senate Candidate Mark Warner on Earth Day

RICHMOND, VA, USA – April 22, 2008 – Intrinergy, a U.S.-based renewable energy company, welcomed former Virginia Governor Mark Warner to its Richmond headquarters. Governor Warner discussed Intrinergy's energy solutions with founders and enjoyed a visual display of the company's operating model and goals. Warner, currently a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate, is a strong supporter of investment in renewable energy and green energy solutions.

From left to right: Thomas Meth (EVP), Mark Warner, John Keppler (CEO), Matt Holland (VP Operations)

Mark Warner (left) and John Keppler (right), Intrinergy's CEO & President

About Mark Warner

Mark Warner served as governor of Virginia from 2002 until January 2006, and is now a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate. During his tenure as governor, Warner made strides on environmental issues including a record investment in the cleanup of the Chesapeake Bay. Developing a new energy policy that invests in renewables and eliminates U.S. dependence on foreign oil is a major focus of Warner's Senate campaign.

About Intrinergy

Founded in 2004, Intrinergy specializes in building, financing, owning, and operating renewable energy facilities. Intrinergy converts cost-competitive biomass into green electricity and thermal energy (steam) for industrial customers, helping to reduce their exposure to fossil fuel price volatility and carbon emissions. Today, Intrinergy operates facilities in Mississippi, Ohio, Germany, and the Dominican Republic; new facilities now in permitting and construction include projects located in Belgium, Connecticut, Delaware, and Pennsylvania. Collectively, these projects represent over $250 million in capital investment. For more information, visit www.Intrinergy.com.